Career Meet Talks Benefit Senior Women

The annual Career Conference and Vocational Guidanee Weck program women students, Mrs. Dorothy Evans

The conferences, which were held Monday through Wednesday, were sponsored by the House Presidents' Council. Although this was only the guidance week, a similar program had been held for senior women for several years, Mrs. Evans said.

Students heard talks on opportimitles for women in such fields as aviation, medicine psychiatry, and journalism

The career conference, now in its third years, gives uppperclass women an opportunity to secure positions before leaving school. Mrs. Evans small number of representatives who Kyian Delayed Veterans Consider eame to interview jeb-seckers. Large postwar labor supplies account for By Shortages

"Considering the few representatives of companies on the campus, Mortar Board's section of vocational week was a success," Union social director Mrs. John Evans said Thursday. Less recruiting is being done this year because job opportunities are fewer, according to Mrs. Evans. About 50 women students with the companies represented.

Women interested in summer eamp jobs should see Mrs. Evans teday in her office, room 121 of the Union. Representatives of Campfire Girls and Girl Scouts are interested In signing students as eamp counselors, she sald.

To Wed Or Not To Wed?

The old argument about waiting or not waiting until one graduates from college to marry is a prominent conversation topic once more. This time, however, there is a new twist. The question has become, "How will marriage affect

Many of the married dischargees of the war are coming back to school on the G1 Bill and are bringing their wives along. About 1/3 of the veterans at UK are enjoying married blessedness. The government and schools are assisting in this, for they're working cooperatively to provide special housing units for the couples.

Parents are going to find out that Junior makes better grades in college, now that he's married, than he did in pre-war college days, when he was single.

Isn't it logical to presume that on the basis of the following six points married couples will make better grades? Each point is a step on the road to concentration-that necessary factor of good study habits.

On the serious side:

(1) The couple has a common purpose-to get through school quickly and settle down to the business of raising a lamily. Their time is too valuable for not making the most of their months in college.

(2) They want to make hetter grades, because to beat all snows when this column they know that the better the grades-the better and talk about spring. For the last
